HOLIDAY CONVERSATIONS GUIDE

“Let your conversation be always full of grace, seasoned with salt, so that you may know how to answer everyone.” — Colossians 4:6

The holiday season holds many conversations between friends and family both easy and difficult. For the unbelievers in your life, you may find it difficult to direct conversations toward the Gospel. With this guide, you can move from getting to know someone better, to exploring spiritual topics, until you find yourself talking about the Gospel, Lord willing.

Learn to identify the following conversations and keep them in mind at end of the year celebrations with friends and family.

- GOOD CONVERSATIONS

Jesus often engaged in meaningful, kind conversations. Have a “good” conversation by showing genuine interest, offering encouragement, and asking thoughtful questions. Be sincere, caring, and conversational. People want to feel noticed, valued, and loved. Strive to create positive interactions wherever you go.

- GOD CONVERSATIONS

Jesus would often guide a conversation toward spiritual topics. You can transition a good conversation into a “God” conversation by briefly mentioning how you’ve experienced God’s work in your life or sharing an attribute of His character. Pay attention to the response; if the person is open, explore the topic further. If not, continue with good conversations, occasionally weaving in insights about God while praying for the right moment.

- GOSPEL CONVERSATIONS

Jesus would also lead conversations to the truth of salvation. Look for ways to bridge God conversations into a “Gospel” conversation. Share personal experiences—how you discovered your need for Jesus, how you came to faith, or how He has changed your life. This can open up opportunities to talk about the key elements of the Gospel: Jesus’ incarnation, crucifixion, and resurrection, which offer salvation.

Provided on the back are a list of questions to help you move these conversations forward. >>>
